ing was smarked, and the wrenkage relied down the steeply banked turn of the race track and caught fire. In the grand stand the wife of the dead driver was shrinking, and the whole erowd was paralyzed with horvor.

Yet the officials allowed the race to continue. Lap after lap the rushing care dashed through the smoke of the wreck, and past the spot where the dootors were busy getting the bodies of the dead away in an ambulance. The race was run through many miles to the finish, and the winners of the cash prizes were announced to the crowd. People had paid to see a race, and the race was provided for them. Such a mere detell as the death of a couple of men made no difference. In the nerversaking strain after the accident other drivers might have been smashed up. But what of it? Race drivers are supposed to be killed sooner or later. Pow of the best ones escape if they stick to racing long enough. It's all in the game.

Can you imagine a football game—between Yale and Harvard, for instance—being played out after two players had been instantly killed on the gridinon?

GEORGE SMITH, who took Young Response to England to fight Jimmy Wilde, is back with a fied that he has given the public urday. Entries for the tournament nor is staying in England, being very ular there as the latest victim of an English champion.

Wilde is the greatest little fighter Pre ever seen," said Smith. "He is of lemon "decision bouts" th Boston, twenty-four years old and married and has two kids. He only weight sty-eight pounds, but he can beat their best up to 120 pounds without any trouble. Rosner is a good little fighter, but Wilde best him easily. I threw in the sponge in the eleventh round, and the referee told me he would have stopped it in that round anyway.

"They were actually offering to bet 150 to 1 that Wilde would stop Rosner. That was before they ever saw Rosner put up his hands. They're crasy over Wilde, but he's a wonder. He walks out with his hands down and he doesn't take the trouble to block. He's faster than lightning. He walked up to Rosner and suddenly began hitting him so fast with both walked up to Rosner and suddenly began hitting him so fast with both hands that Rosner didn't know where they were coming from. He was so quick ducking blows that Rosner could hardly touch him. Just to show you how crazy they are over Wilde in England, the first preliminary was to go on at 8 o'clock, and at 2.15 in the afternoon a big crowd was standing in line outside the Liverpool Stadium waiting for the doors to open. By half-past four the arena seats were all taken. Except for a few people in the boxes the crowd was willing to wait for four or five hours just to see Wilde fight. The sport goes on just as if there wasn't referse's decision at the end.
